The Real Shaftesbury Estate

THE SURPRISING HISTORY OF THE AREA

During the Middle Ages, Shaftesbury Park Estate was nicknamed Pig Hill due to the large amount of piggeries on the estate. Later on, the churchwardens and overseers of Battersea enclosed about 65,000 m² of the area and let it out, in cheap allotments, to the residents of the parish, for the cultivation of vegetables. In the early 1600s, the allotments were flourishing and Battersea had become famous for its market gardening. The gardeners managed to sell their produce for high prices and were the first growers to cultivate and introduce asparagus. One gardener had 40 acres (160,000 m²) of asparagus under cultivation and at one time there were three hundred acres of market gardens within a mile of St Mary's Church, Battersea. The reason to success is assumed to be down to the Huguenots, who settled in Wandsworth in 1639. When Pig Hill became Latchmere Road, this land was known as the Latchmere allotments, but the allotments were later sold to Samuel Poupart (Poupart Junction still has its name from him) and became known as Poupart's Market Garden. The land for the Battersea estate was purchased in 1872 and the estate was built between 1873 and 1877. It now has about 1,200 two-storey houses with gardens laid out in wide tree-lined streets (you could be living in one of these) house and, as you may have noticed, they are consistently of stock brick with red brick dressings and pitched slate roofs. Among that time, the multi award winning, soon-to-be-school and later became the amazing school it is today: Shaftesbury Park Primary School was built.

INTERNATIONAL PI DAY

On the 14th March it is International Pi day.

Just to remind you Pi (also known as Periphery) is:

3.141592653589793238462643383279502884197169399
3751 etc.

Founded in 1988 by physicist Larry Shaw, 14 March was selected because the numerical date (3.14) represents the first three digits of pi, and it also happens to be Albert Einstein's birthday.

Go on a walk

Ever been bored on the weekend? Well, you're in luck, because we might just have an idea or two for you: going for a walk - or if possible you might want to try a cycle. Here are a few steps to help you enjoy:

- plan your route: you don't want to get lost!
- bring a snack: if you're doing a long walk, or cycle, you will probably get hungry at some point
- wrap up warm: better too hot than too cold and you can always take off a layer

You also get a health benefit from walking and cycling. It will certainly burn some calories, give you a few thousand more steps and there is a chance that you'll get some good views. Exercise also makes you happier, so you're more likely to enjoy your day.
